Dala is their name, and melting your hardened heart is their game.

Pop singer/songwriters Sheila Carabine and Amanda Walther have it all – talent, charisma, looks, charm, and heavenly, harmonious singing voices. Combined, their vocal range spans from the darkest depths of the scale to startling and rarely explored heights.

Their extraordinary friendship emerged from a shared high school music class - and the ensuing collaboration has been nothing short of phenomenal. Under the moniker DALA, this Canadian duo has captivated festival-goers and music-lovers all over North America. Yet, for Amanda and Sheila, the past remains part of the present, as DALA passionately and tirelessly promotes music education in schools, performing countless school concerts annually to help underscore the critical importance of music in a child's education and development.

From that serendipitous music class to the venerable Massey Hall, DALA has traveled a long way in a short time. Having shared their signature style of acoustic pop music with ever-broadening, enthusiastic audiences, these two best friends are quickly gaining momentum and winning ardent fans each remarkable concert, festival, and step along the way.
